

At the Theatres.

MR. DANIEL RYAN,

Starring in Romantic and Classic Productions at Bijou Theatre This Week.

Standard Plays.
The inauguration of a new departure for the Bijou Theatre will be witnessed to-morrow night. Heretofore the house has confined itself to light operas and musical farces, meteors from vaudeville and other like entertainments. This week there is the innovation for the popular playhouse, the management having engaged Daniel Ryan, one of the most talented of the young actors, to present a series of romantic and classical productions.

The indications are that the engagement will be one of the most successful in the history of the house, the inquiries at the box office being numerous. The management announces that in order to test the matter and to allow the public full opportunity to judge of the ability of the star and the company the bill is to be changed at each performance—a radical departure for the Bijou. It is the confident belief of many who have seen the company that the entertainment will be as pleasing as have many of the productions headed by well-known stars.

Tragedy and romantic productions are too seldom seen here, and when offered have never been at popular prices that made it possible for the great bulk of the public to witness them.

"Macbeth," "Vlginus," "The Lady of Lyons," "Monte Cristo," and other attractions of the same class will be included in the repertoire. Mr. Wells is confident that the public will support him in his experiment, and if the engagement proves successful it is the intention to follow these attractions with other similar organizations, and to present here such plays at popular prices as have been given in other cities.

The company does not come for one night, to go to some other place for the following night. It is here for a week, thereby demonstrating that those who are behind the venture have full confidence in the discriminating judgment and appreciation of the public in making the experiment a success, and that it will succeed, to the entire satisfaction, as follows:
